

The Native Americans and English Settlers both settled in Plimoth in 1600. The Native Americans and English settlers were alike because they hunted and fished for food and they were different because their communities were not the same.

The Native Americans and English Settlers were alike. One way they were alike was they hunted and fished for food. The Native Americans and English Settlers hunted the same kinds of food such as goose and duck. The Native Americans and English Settlers ate the same food.

The Native Americans and English Settlers were different. One way they were different was there community. The Native Americans had 3,000 Wampanoag in their community. The English Settlers had 180 people in their community. The Native Americans and English Settlers had different communities.

The Native Americans and English Settlers had different communities but the same way to get food. Native Americans and English Settlers found many ways to settle together.