

The Native American and English Settlers both settled in Plymouth in 1600. The Native Americans and English Settlers were alike because they both hunted for food and they were different because their houses were not the same.

The Native Americans and English Settlers were alike. One way they were alike was they hunted for food. The Native Americans and English Settlers both hunted the same food such as goose, duck, swan, beaver, otter, and muskrat. The Native Americans and English Settlers are alike because they both hunted for food together.

The Native Americans and English Settlers were different. One way they were different was their clothing was different. The Native American's clothing was made by deer skin. Their shoes were made out of moose and elk. Sometimes they didn't wear shoes. The English Settlers clothing was made for them. Women wore lots of layers of clothing. Boys wore lots of clothing. The Native Americans and English Settlers wore different clothing.

Native Americans and English Settlers both found that hunting and fishing was useful. However, they wore different types of clothing. Native Americans and English Settlers found many ways to settle together and live together.