

The Native Americans and English settled in Plymouth in 1600. The Native Americans and the English Settlers were alike because they hunted and fished for food and they were different because their houses were not the same.

The Native Americans and English settlers were alike. One way they were alike was they both hunted and fished for food. They ate the same food like goose and duck. The Native Americans and the English eat the same kinds of food.

The Native Americans and English settlers are different because of their clothing. The Native Americans wore clothing like deer, beaver. English wore many layers. The Native Americans and the English settlers wore different clothing.

The Native Americans and the English both ate the same food but they do not wear the same clothing. Native Americans and the English found that hunting was good