

The Native Americans and English settled in Plymouth. The Native Americans and English settlers were alike because they hunted and fished for food and they were different because their house was not the same.

The Native Americans and English settlers were alike. One way they were alike was that they hunted and fished for food. They were alike because they both hunted and fished for food. The thing that they ate was goose, duck and maize. The Native Americans and English settlers both hunted for food.

The Native Americans and English settlers were different .One way they were different was their clothing. The Native Americans clothes were made out of deer skin. The English settlers clothing were made for them. The Native Americans and English settlers clothing were different.

The Native Americans and English settlers found that hunting and fishing were useful; however they wore different types of clothing. Native Americans and English settlers found many ways to live together.