

The Native Americans and English settlers both settled in Plimouth in the 1600's. The Native Americans and English settlers are alike because they hunted and fished for food and they were different because they had different clothing.

The Native Americans and English Settlers were alike. One way they were alike was their food. Both ate goose, and duck. The only way to get the goose and duck is to hunt them down by tracking their footprints. The Native Americans and the English settlers hunted for food.

The Native Americans and English settlers were different .One way they were different was clothing .The Native Americans wore loincloths made out deer skin. The English settlers had their clothing made for them. The clothing of Native Americans and English settlers was different.

The Native Americans and English settlers hunted for food and made clothing. They hunted and fished however they wore different type of clothing.